UMASS LOWELL FAMILY TREE

The University of Massachusetts Lowell has been providing high quality education since the 1890s when its predecessor institutions, Lowell Technological Institute and Lowell State College, were founded. The two schools merged in 1975 to form the University of Lowell, and in 1991 became one of the five campuses of a consolidated University of Massachusetts system.

The mission of the campus – the education of its students, cutting edge research, and partnerships with area businesses – continues a 100-year tradition of responsiveness to the needs of the community and support for regional economic development.
